Communication is a central pillar driving organizational performance at various levels. It holds the capacity to paralyze or propel execution of activities as it facilitates conveyance of basic information that appertains to enhancing productivity. Evidently, information, understanding and awareness of diverse issues form the lifeblood of corporations with strong growth aspirations.

Communication contributes to exemplary performance through advancement of creativity and innovation. According to the provided article, effective communication requires adoption of superior strategies and security elements that hold the potential of enhancing safety of the information relayed. The article emphasizes on the strategies that facilitate effective communication and development of security systems to curb fraudulent activities that hampers delivery of messages.

In particular, the article reports major factors that hinder effective communication where poorly designed institutions, low trust levels, unskilled team officials, and feedback lapses are cited. These elements influence delivery of credible and accurate information for decision making (Stoll, 1988, P. 484). Consequently, bureaucratic system of administration presents major complications to communication management since bureaucracy hinders formulation of clear line of information delivery.

It is proper for institutions to adopt credible strategies that hold requisite capacity of enhancing performance through delivery of accurate messages based on the available products. This is vital since communication aids conveyance of the institutions performance policies and strategies, including promotion of services rendered to enhance consumer awareness.

Communication determines the level of performance and development of organizational networks. It is a paramount element that should be under effective management through adoption of high-security systems to avoid message tampering. The article also emphasizes on the security issues to ensuring delivery of credible information with limited interruptions (Stoll 1988, P. 485).
