Taking a Closer Look
Structuring a Paragraph

An article like this is often written to inform or to persuade. It is usually written in a formal style. It is often written for a specific purpose.

Here are some examples of paragraphs from a text. Each paragraph has a topic sentence, which is the first sentence. It tells you what the paragraph is about.

- In paragraph 1, the topic sentence is 'There is an important question about the future of the world.' This is followed by a question: 'What is the most likely to happen?' This is followed by an answer: 'The most likely is that the world will be a better place than it is now.'

- In paragraph 2, the topic sentence is 'The world is being changed by many things.' This is followed by a list of things: 'The world is being changed by many things, including the environment, the economy, and the population. The world is being changed by many things, including the environment, the economy, and the population. The world is being changed by many things, including the environment, the economy, and the population.'

- Paragraph 3 begins with a topic sentence: 'The world is being changed by many things.' This is followed by a list of things: 'The world is being changed by many things, including the environment, the economy, and the population. The world is being changed by many things, including the environment, the economy, and the population. The world is being changed by many things, including the environment, the economy, and the population.'

- Linking words and phrases are used to link the paragraphs together. For example, 'In paragraph 1...' and 'In paragraph 2...' are used to link the paragraphs together.

Since the book is written for teachers, it is written in a formal style. It is written for a specific purpose. It is written for a specific purpose. It is written for a specific purpose.
