colonialism and the human cost of profit driven industries Max Havelaar ,1949 Max Havelaar Eduard Douwes Dekker,2013-09 This historic book may have numerous typos and missing text Purchasers can usually download a free scanned copy of the original book without typos from the publisher Not indexed Not illustrated 1868 edition Excerpt CHAPTER XIV continuation Of Stern s Composition You know began Havelaar that the Dutch possessions on the west coast of Sumatra are bounded on the North by independent districts of which Atchin is the most important It is said that a secret article in the treaty of 1824 restrains us from extending our frontier in that direction beyond the river SingkeL General van Damme who with a faux air NapoUon wanted to extend his government as far as possible here therefore stopped short at the insurmountable obstacle I must believe in the existence of that secret article because otherwise it would surprise me that the Rajahs1 of Troomon and Analaboo whose provinces are not without importance on account of their active trade in pepper have not long ere now been brought under the Dutch power You know how easy it is to find a pretext for war with such petty sovereigns and for the annexation of their territory To steal a province will always be easier than to steal a mill 1 I believe that General van Damme would even have taken a mill if he had pleased and do not understand therefore how he could have abstained from those provinces in the North if there had not existed more substantial reasons for so doing than right and justice However this may be he extended his conquests not north but east The provinces Mandheling and Ankola the latter was the name of the Assistant Besidency formed out of the hardly tranquillized Battah countries were not yet quite freed from Atchinese influence for when once fanaticism has taken firm root in a country extirpation of it is difficult although the Atchinese were no longer there but this was not enough for the Governor He extended his power to the east coast and Dutch
