OBJECTIVE — To examine the cross-cultural validity of the Problem Areas in Diabetes Scale (PAID) in Dutch and U.S. diabetic patients.

RESEARCH DESIGN AND METHODS — A total of 1,472 Dutch people with diabetes completed the PAID along with other self-report measures of affect. Statistics covered Cronbach's α , exploratory factor analysis (EFA), and confirmatory factor analysis (CFA), Pearson's product-moment correlation, and t tests. Psychometric properties of PAID were compared for Dutch and U.S. diabetic patients.

RESULTS — Internal consistency of the Dutch PAID was high and stable across sex and type of diabetes. Test-retest reliability was high. Principal component analyses confirmed 1 general 20-item factor, whereas EFA identified 4 new subdimensions: negative emotions, treatment problems, food-related problems, and lack of social support. These dimensions were confirmed with CFA and were replicated in the U.S. sample. The PAID and its subscales demonstrated moderate to high associations in the expected direction with other measures of affect. Dutch and U.S. subjects reported having the same problem areas, with U.S. patients reporting higher emotional distress levels both in type 1 and type 2 diabetes.

CONCLUSIONS — The Dutch and U.S. 20-item PAID appeared to be psychometrically equivalent, which allowed for cross-cultural comparisons.

Diabetes Care 23:1305–1309, 2000

Diabetes is a demanding disease with a major effect on the quality of life of patients and their families (1,2). Research has suggested that psychological distress frequently occurs in people with diabetes and is often related to difficulties in coping with the daily regimen and worries about developing late complications (3,4). Psychological distress is not only burdensome itself, but also it can impede the self-care behaviors of the patients, thereby compromising glycemic control (5–7). To quantify levels of emotional distress in people with diabetes, various measures have been developed in the U.K., Germany, Canada, and U.S. (8–11). As Glasgow et al. (12) recently showed, research must establish the relative strengths and weaknesses of the various diabetes-specific instruments, particularly their sensitivity to detect changes and intervention effects (12). We further emphasize the importance of cross-cultural validation of such questionnaires. Psychosocial research in diabetes could benefit significantly from standardization of instruments to allow for international comparison of results (13).

The Problem Areas in Diabetes Scale (PAID) is a brief self-report measure of diabetes-related distress that has been found to be valid and clinically useful in U.S. type 1 and type 2 diabetic patients (14–16). PAID scores have been found to show positive associations with HbA_{1c} and are a major predictor of poor adherence to treatment not involving general emotional distress. The PAID seems to be a good candidate for the measurement of diabetes-related distress across countries, but its cross-cultural validity has yet to be established. Ishii et al. (17) found evidence to support the clinical utility of a Japanese version of the PAID in a sample of predominantly type 2 diabetic patients. In this article, we report on the validation of the Dutch version of the PAID by comparing PAID scores across samples of Dutch and U.S. diabetic patients.

RESEARCH DESIGN AND METHODS

Subjects

As part of a large survey (18), 3,000 randomly selected patients of the 40,000 members of the Dutch Diabetes Association were mailed a booklet of self-report questionnaires, including the PAID. To determine test-retest reliability, a random sample of 250 patients from the total group was invited for a second assessment ~2 months later. PAID data from a U.S. sample of 256 type 1 and type 2 diabetic patients at the Joslin Diabetes Center (Boston, MA) (15) were reanalyzed and compared with the Dutch sample.

Measures

Self-reported demographic and clinical characteristics of the subjects included age, sex, marital status, monthly income, years of education, age at onset of diabetes, treatment regimen, number of complications, most recent HbA_{1c} level, comorbidity, fre-

Depression and Type 2 Diabetes Khalida Ismail, Andreas Barthel, Stefan R. Bornstein, Julio Licinio, 2018-08-22 Type 2 diabetes is a major global health concern and is predicted to affect between 10% to 25% of the world's population in the next 20 years. This epidemic is mostly attributed to ageing populations and unhealthy lifestyles. Thusly understanding how the mind interacts with the body is essential in unlocking the psychological, biological, and sociocultural processes that increase the risk of type 2 diabetes and make it such a difficult condition to treat. Depression is a common co-morbid condition and when both conditions are present, this poses a significant challenge to patients, clinicians, and health care systems globally. Depression and Type 2 Diabetes is a unique resource offering a fresh scientific approach to this frequent co-morbidity. Using the latest research and guidelines, this resource provides readers with a comprehensive overview of the subject at the different stages of human lifespan, from the uterine environment where the metabolic thermostat is first set, to growing old with diabetes. Written and edited by international experts in diabetes and depression, Depression and Type 2 Diabetes reviews, critiques, and advances the latest research on the prevalent and complex relationship between depression and type 2 diabetes.

Behavioral Diabetes Alan M. Delamater, David G. Marrero, 2020-01-16 This book presents an up-to-date review of behavioral factors in diabetes management across the lifespan, an update on medical management, epidemiology, and prognosis, and utilizes an ecological framework to address various aspects of diabetes management for children and adults on the individual, social, community, and medical system, and policy levels. The individual level examines biobehavioral and neuroendocrine factors for their role in the etiology of diabetes, as well as various demographic factors involved in health disparities and specific psychological issues including distress and quality of life, depression, and anxiety, eating disorders, and intervention approaches. Zooming out, the social level addresses the role of social support and family influences, as well as group and family interventions to promote more effective diabetes management. The community level addresses medical system factors, including the patient-physician relationship and transition programs, as well as community and school-based prevention programs. Finally, chapters also address how the policy level impacts diabetes management, considering the role of health care insurance and school and workplace policy. Topics featured in this book include Neuroendocrine and biobehavioral influences on diabetes, Eating disorders in individuals with diabetes, Family influences and family therapies for children and adults with diabetes, Depression and anxiety in children and adults with diabetes. Behavioral Diabetes is a must-have resource for researchers, graduate students, and fellows, as well as clinicians, therapists, and other practitioners involved in diabetes management across the lifespan. A secondary audience comprises individuals working in the community and policy levels, including but not limited to health care and medical systems administrators, as well as school and workplace policymakers. This book is a comprehensive overview of the extremely important topic of behavioral diabetes. The issues encompassed in this book have evolved greatly over the last few decades and the editors have done a spectacular job in having the key experts on each of the many topics review the literature while at the same time keeping it practical for both clinicians and researchers Irl B Hirsch MD University of Washington Seattle
