love he lays a great stress upon he shows that there is a greater moment and weight in Christian charity than in the most part of those things for which some Christians bite and devour one another It is the fundamental law of the gospel to which all positive precepts and ordinances should stoop Unity in judgment is very necessary for the well being of Christians and Christ s last words persuade this that unity in affection is most essential and fundamental This is the badge that he left to his disciples if we cast away this upon every different apprehension of mind we disown our Master and disclaim his token and badge Mr Binning treats of this subject in a most sublime and pathetic strain he explains the nature of this grace discourses of the excellent properties and blessed effects and fruits of it in a ravishing and captivating manner There is such a variety of beauties in this treatise that they deserve to be noticed in this preface and particularly his admirable commentary on the 13th chapter of the First Epistle to the Corinthians wherein he outstrips all that went before him and in fine he enforces the exercise of this grace with the most convincing arguments and the most powerful motives And now not to detain the reader from the perusal it is earnestly wished that the end of the publication may by the blessing of God be obtained which is that Christians in our days may be as the primitive ones of one mind and of one heart and that they may love one another with a pure heart fervently
