

CHARACTERIZING BLOOD CELLS

Blood cell	Description	Function	Normal value
Red cell	Also called erythrocyte, is a cellular component of blood. A mature human blood cell is small, round, and biconcave; it appears dumbbell-shaped in profile. The cell is flexible and assumes a bell shape when passing through narrow capillaries. RBCs lack a nucleus and other organelles and can neither produce nor carry on extensive metabolic activities. Diameter: 7-8 μm	The function of the red cell and its hemoglobin is to carry oxygen from the lungs or gills to all the body tissues and to carry carbon dioxide, a waste product of metabolism, to the lungs, where it is excreted.	Male: 4.5 million cells/ μL Female: 4.8 million cells/ μL
Neutrophil	A type of white blood cell that is fairly uniform in size. The nucleus has 2-5 lobes connected by thin strands of chromatin and the cytoplasm has a very fine, pale lilac granules. Diameter: 10-12 μm	Phagocytosis. Neutrophils engulf bacteria and other microorganisms and microscopic particles. The granules of the neutrophil are microscopic packets of potent enzymes capable of digesting many types of cellular material.	60%-70% of all WBCs
Lymphocyte	The nucleus is round or slightly indented and stains dark. The cytoplasm stains sky blue and forms a rim around the nucleus. There are two main types of lymphocytes: B cells and T cells. Small lymphocytes have 6-9 μm diameter while large lymphocytes have 10-14 μm diameter.	Monocytes mediate immune responses including antigen-antibody reactions. B cells - produce antibodies that are used to attack invading bacteria, viruses, and fungi. T cells - destroy the body's own cells that have themselves been taken over by viruses or become cancerous.	20-25% of all WBCs
Monocyte	The nucleus is usually kidney-shaped, or horseshoe shaped, and the cytoplasm is blue-gray and has a foamy appearance. Monocytes have fine azurophilic granules which are lysosomes. Diameter: 12-20 μm	Phagocytosis (after transforming into fixed or wandering macrophages).	3-8% of all WBCs
