1000s-1400s: Ancient Greek Theatre

The Ancient Greeks created purpose-built theatre architectural structures. Greek amphitheatres were usually cut into a hillside, with tiered seating surrounding the stage in semi-circles, like the Theatre at Epidaure pictured above. Most plays in ancient Greece were based on myths and legends, and often included a chorus who commented on the action. The works of famous Greek playwrights, such as Sophocles, Aristophanes and Euripides, are still performed today.

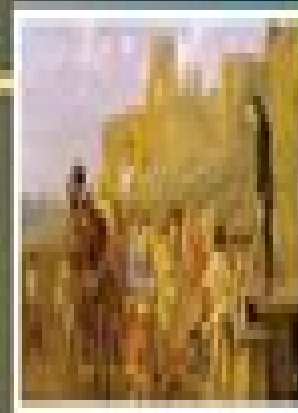

1500s-6000s: Ancient Roman Theatre

The Romans continued the Greek theatrical tradition. Their theatre resembled Greek amphitheatres but were built on level sites, foundations and other aspects not all alike. The Colosseum in Rome (pictured), which was built between AD1 and AD80, is an example of a traditional Roman theatre. Theatrical events were huge spectacles and could include acrobatics, dancing, fighting or a mixture of several being held on stage. Roman actors wore specific costumes to represent different types of female characters.

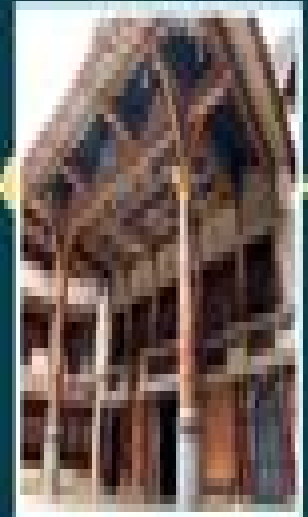

900s-1500s: Medieval Theatre

After the burning of Roman theatre sites, the theatre did not exist. It was reintroduced during the 10th century in the form of religious drama, plays with moral and mystery plays performed in churches, and later outdoors. At a time when church services were conducted in Latin, plays were designed to teach Christian stories and messages to people who could not read.

1500s: Commedia dell'Arte (Italy)

The form of Italian theatre became popular in the 16th and 17th centuries. Props and costumes were fixed and the plays were performed in front of an open raised platform in public places (pictured). This generally covered around the struggle of young men whose action was being followed by an older man. These plays made use of a set of stock characters that, at first, differed from town to town. This type of play also found its way into both French and English theatre.

1550-1600s: Elizabethan Theatre

Theatre during the reign of Elizabeth I had largely become linked with one name - William Shakespeare, arguably the most influential and famous dramatist of all time. During Elizabethan times, plays were staged in special wooden playhouses. The Swan Theatre (pictured), on the banks of the River Thames in London, is a prime example. The majority of the audience would have stood in the 'yard' in front of the stage, while other audience members sat on benches around the stage.
