Logistic Traffic - A Supply Chain Management Factor in Hospitality Robert Maršanić, 2014

The purpose of this paper is based on the fact that managing supply chains as a separate area of business management opens up numerous possibilities for improving the competitive position of business systems. Supply chain management is increasingly often named as the key offensive factor to increasing the efficacy and effectiveness of economic systems.

Design The purpose of the paper is to point to the fact that hospitality logistics fulfills its basic mission only when high quality products are delivered to the right place at the right time in the appropriate assortment with the lowest internal and external costs while doing their maximum to meet the wishes, needs, and the demand of the customers.

Methodology The methodology is based on proving the proposed hypothesis. Modern logistics traffic represents a condition sine qua non of rational supply chain management in hospitality.

Approach The approach of the paper is based on the fact that supply chain management represents a broader strategically significant concept which includes the entire supply chain and has the following goals: customer satisfaction, formulating and implementing appropriate strategies, and effective supply chain management.

Findings Although each modality of the traffic logistic system has its own specific mission, they all have a common basic mission to prepare material goods for manipulation, transport, and distribution; the actual transport and distribution of material goods and conducting various logistic activities connected to preparing manipulating transporting and distributing material goods The originality of this research The originality of this research is revisiting the traffic logistics model as an exclusive factor of the competitive micro hospitality industry in tourist destinations on a theoretical level which can be set up via simple complicated and multimodal traffic logistic models in micro hospitality industries
