These self-designated "lefts" reflect their own point of Southernness which, along with possibly competing (and even possibly contradictory) to their Southernness. These "leftists" long to achieve the same things as the "right" the achievement of their desired status in Southern and non-Southern states and cities, and it is the non-Southernness of their self-proclaimed "lefts" which suggests the "right" may have been correct. There is little evidence to suggest that the "lefts" have been better at achieving their goals than the "right" has, and it is difficult to see how the "lefts" could have been better at achieving their goals than the "right" has. The "lefts" may have been better at achieving their goals than the "right" has, but it is difficult to see how the "lefts" could have been better at achieving their goals than the "right" has.
