Science communication experts recommend that written material for non-academic audiences should:

Include all available mathematical formulas and graphs.
Use conversational language, short sentences, and active verbs.
Extensively describe the methods used in technical detail.
Avoid using anecdotes or stories. - answer ☐ Use conversational language, short sentences, and active verbs.

Which is considered the standard way for academic researchers to first disclose new research findings?

In blogs or videos posted online
In press releases distributed through their employer's website
In peer-reviewed journals or presentations at professional meetings
In mainstream newspapers - answer ☐ In peer-reviewed journals or presentations at professional meetings

In the context of science communication, the use of common words like "theory" and "organic" may be confusing because:

They downplay the significance of scientific findings.
They are words not used by the public.
They are no longer used in research fields and have been replaced by more modern terms.
They can mean different things in science and in everyday conversation. - answer ☐ They can mean different things in science and in everyday conversation.

Which statement most accurately describes the "deficit model" of science communication?

Science organizations can raise money by communicating better
Scientists suffer from a deficit in effective communication skills
The news media lacks well-informed science coverage
Experts provide knowledge to a passive, poorly informed public - answer ☐ Experts provide knowledge to a passive, poorly informed public
