

we take it a step further – even if it gets a bit mystical now – and imagine something at tonight would have a building, and it can be to imagine what that would be for with nothing left, nothing there to think anything else.
The question arises: does the building still have a sound?
By a lot of questions I think each one needs a kind of love.
They have sounds that aren't caused by factors. For to also what they are. Maybe it's the word or something. But you only really feel there's something else there when you enter a space that's soundproofed. It's lovely. I find it's a beautiful thing when you're making a building and you imagine the building in that silence. I mean trying to make the building a quiet place. That's really difficult because because our world has become so noisy. With not so much being possible. But I know other places that are much quieter and you have to go to some lengths to make quiet rooms and imagine the sound they make with all their proportions and materials in a silence of their own.
I realize the sound I am making must remind you of a certain – but that is more simple than that, and more quiet than that? How does it really sound, when we walk through it When we speak, when we talk to each other – what will

Reading Architecture Angeliki Sioli, Yoonchun Jung, 2018-04-09 Why write instead of draw when it comes to architecture Why rely on literary pieces instead of architectural treatises and writings when it comes to the study of buildings and urban environments Why rely on literary techniques and accounts instead of architectural practices and analysis when it comes to academic research and educational projects Why trust authors and writers instead of sociologists or scientists when it comes to planning for the future of cities This book builds on the existing interdisciplinary bibliography on architecture and literature but prioritizes literature's capacity to talk about the lived experience of place and the premise that literary language can often express the inexpressible It sheds light on the importance of a literary instead of a pictorial imagination for architects and it looks into four contemporary architectural subjects through a wide variety of literary works Drawing on novels that engage cities from around the world the book reveals aspects of urban space to which other means of architectural representation are blind Whether through novels that employ historical buildings or sites interpreted through specific literary methods it suggests a range of methodologies for contemporary architectural academic research By exploring the power of narrative language in conveying the experience of lived space it discusses its potential for architectural design and pedagogy Questioning the massive architectural production of today's globalized capital driven world it turns to literature for ways to understand resist or suggest alternative paths for architectural practice Despite literature's fictional character the essays of this volume reveal true dimensions of and for places beyond their historical social and political reality dimensions of utmost importance for architects urban planners historians and theoreticians nowadays
