THE LUNGA CONTROVERSY

Lunga is a privately built, planned city near Pune, located near the Raj Reservoir. It is a project of the Lunghar Construction Company and is often described as the first self-sustaining township after independence. The plan for the city, which was to have an area of 280 sq km, was a grid—there were to be hotels, a city centre, a university, a sports facility, and many parks (read 'Green Lunga: The Hill City', on the website <http://www.lunga.com/English/Welcome.asp>). The city has many features of progress: a railway and its passenger train station, a hospital, and has the distinction of being the largest urban infrastructure project in India as it provides significant economic benefits to the region. It unique architectural design that is carefully integrated with natural surroundings, enhancing the eco-friendliness of the site and over 70% of the area that is not developed through deforestation, reforestation and forest greening.¹

Lunga city has been planned and developed by the internationally renowned design consultant HOK, US, and has received awards such as the World Architectural Award. Lunghar Corporation also has taken up various corporate social responsibility (CSR) projects for the people in the region, especially in the areas of health, education, employment, housing, and environment. In the CSR initiative, along with the construction, some of the major projects were in the field of solid waste management, bio-fertiliser, and nature tourism.²

However, the project has attracted controversy from the day it began, ranging from issues of environmental damage to procurement of land by legal means and showing bias through corrupt methods.

In 2003, Indian Ministry of Environment requested the company to stop the construction as it violated the environmental norms. The Ministry of Environment and Forests had set up a panel to look into the matter and asked the company to stop work until the panel report was received. The company had to stop work for 18 months. The company had to stop work for 18 months. The company had to stop work for 18 months.

Although the project had planned to stop work from the market using an online public offer (IPO), the plan has been temporarily deferred following the chairman's advice from the company.

Lunga's residents have been in the hands of a chairman named by the company. It denied the allegations made by the Ministry and issued a press release, a copy of which was placed
