

Chapter 4 Red Books: Local Culture, Popular Culture, and Cultural Landscapes

What are local and popular cultures?

A culture is a group of belief systems, norms, and values practiced by people.

- People call themselves a culture.
- Or other people, mainly academic, label a group with common values and beliefs as a culture.

A folk culture is usually a small, typically rural culture that is homogenous with its cultural traits.

A popular culture is usually cultures that are large heterogeneous populations, urban, and experiences quickly changing cultural traits.

- Spreads through hierarchical diffusion
- Hearth is point of origin.

A local culture is a group of people in a particular place who see themselves as a community or groups, who share experiences and customs, and traits. The group of people works to preserve their customs and their uniqueness.

Material culture is the part of the culture in what people construct things. Such as art, houses, dances and foods.

Nonmaterial culture is the part of the culture that includes the beliefs, practices, aesthetics, or values.

How are local cultures sustained?

From the 1800s to the 1900s, the US government had an official policy of assimilation.

- The US wanted to assimilate indigenous people into the dominate culture. The most 'American' people would get benefits.

Local cultures are also sustained through customs. A custom is a practice that a group of people routinely follow.

Local cultures have two goals, keeping other cultures out, and keep their own culture in. For example, some local cultures may create a boundary around themselves.
