Myocardial Infarction G.S. Wagner, 2012-12-06 Patients currently experiencing acute myocardial infarcts are the beneficiaries of information gathered during the 80 years since this clinical phenomenon was described and the 20 years since treatment in coronary care units was introduced Physicians have gained the ability to minimize inhospital mortality from rhythm disturbances and have gained insight into the importance of optimizing both left ventricular filling pressure and outflow resistance in the management of myocardial failure Understanding of the pathophysiology of acute myocardial infarcts has matured sufficiently so that now it is possible to consider whether an infarct must evolve to a predetermined size or whether the size could be limited by implementing one or more clinically feasible strategies Concurrently it has become evident that patients with acute infarcts are not as fragile as previously supposed and that they may undergo procedures such as coronary angiography and coronary bypass surgery with acceptable risks Clinical trials are currently in progress to assess the possible benefit of various interventions for limiting myocardial infarct size The outcome of these studies may be used to formulate strategies for clinical care of future patients If the results are positive community hospitals may undergo changes even more extensive than those required when they established coronary care units If the interventions are not proven to provide significant advantages over the course of nature the current concepts of coronary care may be retained However such conclusions will be only as valid as the techniques used to measure infarct size
