Course description

This course provides an overview of game theory and its applications to political science. We start from the ground floor, assuming no prior exposure to game theory or mathematics beyond high school algebra. Students are introduced to game theoretic concepts such as Nash equilibrium, time-consistency, and signaling. These concepts can be applied to examine a variety of political phenomena, including candidate competition, fund-raising, political posturing, and executive-legislative bargaining. While most of the applications of game theory that we explore will be political in nature, some of our applications will be drawn from the world of economics and every-day life.

This course has three objectives:

1. The first objective is to introduce you to some of the more popular methods of solving games employed by game theorists.
2. The second objective is to provide the necessary background for you to both appreciate and critically analyze political science scholarship employing game theoretic models.

¹I reserve the right to change this syllabus as needed. Date last updated: August 29, 2019.

²This syllabus benefitted from Deborah Beim, Justin Fox, and Keith Schnakenberg sharing their materials.
