Deadly Powers Paul A. Trout, 2011-11-15 In this illuminating and evocative exploration of the origin and function of storytelling the author goes beyond the work of mythologist Joseph Campbell arguing that mythmaking evolved as a cultural survival strategy for coping with the constant fear of being killed and eaten by predators Beginning nearly two million years ago in the Pleistocene era the first stories Trout argues functioned as alarm calls warning fellow group members about the carnivores lurking in the surroundings At the earliest period before the development of language these rudimentary stories would have been acted out When language appeared with the evolution of the ancestral human brain stories were recited memorized and much later written down as the often bone chilling myths that have survived to this day This book takes the reader through the landscape of world mythology to show how our more recent ancestors created myths that portrayed animal predators in four basic ways as monsters as gods as benefactors and as role models Each incarnation is a variation of the fear management technique that enabled early humans not only to survive but to overcome their potentially incapacitating fear of predators In the final chapter Trout explores the ways in which our visceral fear of predators is played out in the movies where both animal and human predators serve to probe and revitalize our capacity to detect and survive danger Anyone with an interest in mythology archaeology folk tales and the origins of contemporary storytelling will find this book an exciting and provocative exploration into the natural and psychological forces that shaped human culture and gave rise to storytelling and mythmaking
