Modern Chemical Technology and Emission Control M.B. Hocking, 2012-12-06. This text of applied chemistry considers the interface between chemistry and chemical engineering using examples of some of the important processes in industries. Integrated with this is detailed consideration of measures which may be taken for avoidance or control of potential emissions. This new emphasis in applied chemistry has been developed through eight years of experience gained from working in industry in research, development and environmental control fields plus twelve years of teaching here using this approach. It is aimed primarily towards science and engineering students as well as to environmentalists and practising professionals with responsibilities or an interest in this interface. By providing the appropriate process information back to back with emissions and control data, the potential for process fine tuning is improved for both raw material efficiency and emission control objectives. This approach also emphasizes integral process changes rather than add on units for emission control. Add on units have their place when rapid action on an urgent emission problem is required or when control simply is not feasible by process integral changes alone. Obviously fundamental process changes for emission containment are best conceived at the design stage. However, at whatever stage process modifications are installed, this approach to control should appeal to the industrialist in particular in that something more substantial than decreased emissions may be gained.

Environmentally Benign Pulping Pratima Bajpai, 2023-02-05. This book provides the most up to date and comprehensive information on the state of the art techniques and aspects involved in environment friendly pulping technologies. Traditional chemical and semi chemical pulping processes are not environmentally friendly. Therefore, it has become important to look for alternative approaches to mitigate wastewater emissions in the paper industry by making more stringent regulations to improve environmental conservation. In response to this problem, new raw materials need to be explored to replace traditional choices and also new pulping processes need to be developed based on less polluting, more easily recovered reagents. This book presents new and emerging deep eutectic solvents for lignocellulosic biomass pretreatment and discusses the effects of deep eutectic solvents on biomass pretreatment and the production of value added products It also introduces biotechnological methods of pulping Biotechnological processes help to make manufacturing processes cleaner and more efficient by reducing toxic chemical pollution and greenhouse gas emissions Given its scope this book is of interest to applied chemists foresters chemical engineers wood scientists along with engineers and researchers involved in the pulp and paper industry as a valuable reference
