Effective Interventions for Children with Reactive Attachment Disorder Christina M. Wiersum, 2010 Reactive Attachment Disorder RAD was first introduced 30 years ago to the Diagnostic and Statistical Manual of Mental Disorders 3rd Edition DSM III Dziegielewska 2002 Many questions have since come into play about the validity criteria and its impact on children Becoming more aware of these conditions and the effects they have on infants and children will help clinicians correctly identify children with the diagnosis of RAD and provide treatment accordingly With that said effective interventions for children with the diagnosis of RAD are crucial in helping these children grow up in a loving and nurturing manner This study interviewed seven mental health experts to identify effective interventions as well as effective school based interventions Results indicated that there were several interventions being utilized within the field and all were given a high rating in effectiveness It was also found that a combination of interventions adds to the effectiveness of treatment and the outcome for children with the diagnosis of RAD Advice was also provided to school personnel and school psychologists when working with these children Overall the results provided insight to the interventions being utilized as well as what school personnel and school psychologists can do to help these children succeed in school

Reactive Attachment Disorder, 2016 Reactive Attachment Disorder RAD remains one of the most poorly researched and understood mental disorders and as a result children and families continue to struggle with appropriate treatment options Psychologists in both clinic and school settings are inadequately prepared to address the challenges that these children present This study was designed to answer four broad questions about psychologists training knowledge and assumptions regarding RAD methods of assessment and diagnosis goals and approaches to treatment and theoretical approaches The study used a mixed methods approach using quantitative survey questions Phase 1 followed by qualitative individual interviews Phase 2 as data sources The participants for Phase 1 of the study included 44 clinic and school based psychologists and participants for Phase 2 included seven psychologists who reported a significant amount of knowledge of and experience with RAD on the survey The results of this preliminary study indicate that clinic and school based psychologists had similar knowledge level of training and experience working with children with the disorder In addition psychologists in both settings use similar approaches to evaluating children who exhibit symptomology of RAD although psychologists in school settings are less likely to diagnose children than those in clinic settings Intervention strategies most often utilized are behaviorally or social cognitively oriented but psychologists also use attachment promoting therapies when treatment can consistently involve the parent or caregiver Attachment work is less likely to happen in educational settings despite many children with RAD receiving some or all of their treatment at school

Frequency of RAD Diagnosis and Attachment Disorder in Community Mental Health Agency

Clients Paula S. Morgan, 2004 Attachment Disorder AD in children has been characterized by particularly alarming behaviors yet the identification of this disorder for clinicians in community mental health agencies is problematic The only available diagnosis that addresses attachment problems is the DSM IV diagnosis of Reactive Attachment Disorder RAD a diagnosis that does not include the more severely disturbed behaviors that have been associated with attachment disordered children This dissertation examined the frequency with which CMHA child clients were diagnosed with RAD as well as the actual occurrence of attachment problems and Attachment Disorder as measured by the Randolph Attachment Disorder Questionnaire RADA The Personality Inventory for Children Second Edition PIC 2 was used as another measure to explore behavior problems in this population Results of this study indicated that less than one percent of 662 CMHA child clients had received a diagnosis of RAD However a total of 41% of participants in the study had attachment problems 23% with AD as measured by the RADQ Additional study results indicated that there was no significant difference in RADQ scores between children currently living with their birth parents and those living in other arrangements However as the number of caregivers for children increased so did RADA scores indicating there was an increase in attachment disordered behavior problems Significant correlations were found between the RADQ scores and the PIC 2 scales of Delinquency Cognitive Impairment Impulsivity Distractibility Reality Distortion Psychological Discomfort and Social Skills Deficits No relationship was found between RADQ scores and the PIC 2 scale scores of Family Dysfunction Somatic Concerns and Social Withdrawal Interviews of CMHA clinicians revealed confusion and concern regarding the DSM IV diagnosis of Reactive Attachment Disorder and what specialists in the field refer to as Attachment Disorder Most of the clinicians reported having had very little exposure to this diagnosis in their graduate schools programs and seldom assigned a diagnosis of RAD due to confusion over the criteria and concern over treatment issues
