Claire Kramsch

This paper surveys the research methods and approaches used in the multidisciplinary field of applied language studies or language education over the last forty years. Drawing on insights gained in psycho- and sociolinguistics, educational linguistics and linguistic anthropology with regard to language and culture, it is organized around five major questions that concern language educators. The first is: How is cultural meaning encoded in the linguistic sign? It discusses how the use of a symbolic system affects thought, how speakers of different languages think differently when speaking, and how speakers of different discourses (across language or in the same language) have different cultural worldviews. The second question is: How is cultural meaning expressed pragmatically through verbal action? It discusses the realization of speech acts across cultures, culturally-inflected conversation analysis, and the use of cultural frames. The third question is: How is culture co-constructed by participants in interaction? It discusses how applied linguistics has moved from a structuralist to a constructivist view of language and culture, from performance to performativity, and from a focus on culture to a focus on historicity and subjectivity. The fourth question is: How is research on language and culture affected by language technologies? The print culture of the book, the virtual culture of the Internet, the online culture of electronic exchanges all have their own ways of redrawing the boundaries of what may be said, written and done within a given discourse community. They are inextricably linked to issues of power and control. The last section explores the current methodological trends in the study of language and culture: the increased questioning and politicization of cultural reality, the increased interdisciplinary nature of research, the growing importance of reflexivity, and the noticeable convergence of intercultural communication studies and applied language studies in the study of language and culture.

Given the overwhelming diversity of areas covered by the field of research called “Applied Linguistics” (for a review, see Knapp 2014, de Bot in press) I will focus here on the area acknowledged by Knapp as “by far the biggest and best known”, namely language studies or language education. Fostering Culture Through Film Elda Buonanno Foley, Patrizia Comello Perry, 2016-05-11 The perceived lack of understanding of cultural diversity in the American learning community has led instructors to challenge assumptions and stereotypes while addressing misconceptions Teachers of foreign languages and cultural studies in particular feel the need to redesign curricula and lesson plans to better serve the learning community of the twenty first century The common starting point resides in the paradox that exists in today s connected world while global access to information makes learners aware of the infinite variety of cultural diversity it does not however make them critical thinkers For this reason there is opportunity to reshape critical thinking within a more global perspective while enhancing the tools to identify interpret and compare the different cultural models that learners encounter The book demonstrates the theories and practical applications by which instructors use contemporary film to provide insightful readings on diverse local communities communities that form the basis of global culture This collection of essays will serve as a pedagogical tool and resource offering methods and examples of a communicative approach to analyze and integrate cultural diversities similarities and problems in the second language curricula methods that expose students to different cultural models while scaffolding their critical approach to multiple layers of common and specific values This work will encourage a dialogue and long lasting conversation on methodologies and teaching strategies rethought reapplied and remolded to the new learning environments

Learning Language and Culture Via Public Internet Discussion Forums B. Hanna,Juliana De Nooy,2009-03-31 Public Internet discussion forums offer vast possibilities for interaction with speakers of other languages with newspaper websites from many countries proposing forums on a smorgasbord of topics from travel to tertiary education to techno music These sites provide opportunities both for authentic foreign language practice and for developing intercultural competence Currently however public forums are largely ignored by language educators in favour of purpose built exchanges between learners The authors investigate the untapped pedagogical potential of these forums Drawing on examples from English and French language media websites they explore cultural differences in public forum discussion and propose guidelines for participating effectively and maximising the learning opportunities Case studies highlight the skills needed to venture beyond learner to learner interaction and engage with another culture autonomously in roles other than that of student The emphasis on strategies for successful and culturally sensitive interaction in authentic contexts makes the book a valuable tool for teachers and learners of any language
