

Comprehension Questions in Bahasa Indonesia and English Textbooks

Questions in their whole or part reading activities are mostly used to check the students' comprehension about texts. They ought to challenge all levels of the students' comprehension: literal, inferential and evaluative. They are mostly written after texts in textbooks. However, not all textbooks take these levels of comprehension into account. This study investigated what levels of comprehension were challenged in the Bahasa Indonesia and English textbooks for Junior High School students and how teachers treat the questions in text books. It was found that in the Bahasa Indonesia textbook, 19.9 % of questions challenge literal comprehension level, 45.9% check inferential level and 34% examine evaluative ones. In the English textbooks, 42.9 % challenge the students' literal comprehension level and 52.7 rate inferential and only 4.2% positive evaluative ones. It was also found that most teachers treated the questions as they were. They scarcely modified them. These findings show in the textbooks the comprehension levels are not evenly challenged. The fact that literal level was not much used in Bahasa Indonesia might lead students guess the content of the texts without reading. Meanwhile in English textbooks, neglecting evaluative comprehension level might lead students to be uncritical. Therefore, it is recommended that textbook writers as well as teachers should be more cautious in generating questions so that all levels of comprehension are well presented.

In many language lessons, textbooks help teachers teach intensive reading. This lesson is aimed to help students to comprehend texts (Auerhoid and Field 1997 in Hodgcock and Ferris, 2009). They work simultaneously with the same texts and activities like re-reading the texts by answering comprehension questions (Hodgcock and Ferris 2009 p. 172). The questions function to check students' understanding (Nunan and Lamb, 1996 in Yang 2010). The students as readers are more likely to understand what they read when they are asked comprehension questions about the texts and receive immediate feedback about their answers (Bassell and Rasinski, 2008 p. 20).

Comprehension questions are expected not only to facilitate but also to challenge at least three levels of comprehension: literal, inferential and evaluative or critical.

Literal comprehension is level of understanding of a text wherein a reader has access and can recognize and recall details in the text (Bassell and Rasinski, 2008, p. 87). It requires recognition and recall of ideas, information and happening explicitly stated in the reading selection (Clymer, 1968 in Hudson, 2007 p. 83). The examples of them are finding date of flight, who is ...; what/where did she/he ...; what happened when or during ...; find out the differences between ... and ...?

Inferential or interpretative comprehension is the level of understanding wherein readers can read meanings which are not directly stated on the texts (Bassell and Rasinski, 2008, p. 17; Alexander, 1999; Harris & Glenda, 1985 in Setiadi, 2010 p. 92; Briskin, 2005). This level requires the orchestration and the manipulation of information from the text as well as within the readers (Bassell and Rasinski, 2008, p. 17). The questions are, for example, how did she converse with ...; what was the weather like; do you think ...; what will happen next etc.

Evaluative or critical comprehension refers to the understanding of a text which requires readers to use an adequately developed knowledge base (Carr and Thompson, 1999) and new information (Briskin, 2005) including prior knowledge, intuition, and imagination to make hypotheses (Pennell, 2002), to draw conclusions, to make reasonable predictions, connections between conclusions and critical judgments about what texts (Carr and Zimmerman, 1997 in Pennell, 2002; Clymer 1968 in Hudson, 2007 pp. 84-5; Bassell & Rasinski, 2008 p. 17). The examples of the questions are what strange ideas did ... have? why was ... true?, how do you feel about this character?, what do you think ...'s attitude?
