

Kurt Lewin: groups, experiential learning and action research

Kurt Lewin: groups, experiential learning and action research, Kurt Lewin was a seminal theorist who deepened our understanding of groups, experiential learning, and action research. What did he actually add to theory and practice of informal education?

Kurt Lewin's post-1945 work had a profound impact on social psychology and, more particularly for our purposes here, on our appreciation of experiential learning, group dynamics and action research. On this page we provide a very brief outline of his life and an assessment of his continuing relevance for educators. Kurt Lewin was born on September 9, 1898 in the village of Müsseln in Prussia (now part of Poland). He was one of four children in a middle class Jewish family (his father owned a small general store and a farm). They moved to Berlin when he was aged 15 and he was enrolled in the Gymnasium. In 1916 Kurt Lewin entered the University of Freiburg to study medicine. He then transferred to the University of Munich to study biology. Around this time he became involved in the socialist movement. His particular interests appear to have been the combating of anti-Semitism, the democratic situation of German institutions, and the need to improve the position of women. Along with other students he organised and taught an adult education program for working class women and men (Marrow 1976).
