

Questions and Answers: ISO 9001

We answer lots of questions and post answers in our FAQ page. Here are some common ones:

"What procedures are required?"

The standard requires six specific procedures, a quality manual, a quality policy and quality objectives. It also requires documentation needed to plan, operate and control your processes. For an effective system, most organizations will need more than the six specified procedures.

What is included in "work environment" and what do we need to do to manage it?

You must provide the physical resources needed to fulfill customer requirements. How does your work environment affect product quality? Think about temperature, cleanliness, humidity, layout of equipment, vibration, static, light, noise and any other factors that impact the product or the ability of employees to produce conforming product.

Some work environment issues will overlap with preservation of product. For example, temperature controls or ESD procedures. These can be covered in another procedure, as long as they are taken care of.

What is a quality plan?

A quality plan is a "document specifying the quality management system elements and the resources to be applied in a specific case". The "case" may be a product, project, process or even a specific contract.

The quality plan can consist of production paperwork, a formal plan, a table of requirements, or other form of document that specifies what needs to be done for operation, control, monitoring and measuring of the process, project or product.

Incoming inspection: do we have to inspect everything?

This is a common question from organizations starting ISO 9001 programs, so here is the good news: there is no requirement that you have to inspect everything. The requirement is that you determine how you will know that you have good parts, raw materials and services that go into making your product.
