

Energy and Recycling

PURPOSE

- Compare energy costs of recycling aluminum for reuse for making new from raw materials.
- Investigate political, financial, and social barriers of recycling, such as environmental and economic factors.

BACKGROUND

The county government in our county used to initiate an aluminum recycling program. Most of the aluminum is in the form of beverage cans. In the first year, the county collected 1.4×10^6 kg of cans. It takes about 60-megajoules of energy to make a kilogram.

All communities in the county have curbside pickup of recycled materials. On average, each truck makes a 15-km round-trip, up 1,000 kg of aluminum and gets 1 km/L fuel economy. Each liter of fuel produces 43,000 kJ energy.

EXERCISES

Show all your work.

1. How many cans did the county collect in the first year?
2. To the nearest whole number, how many kg of cans were collected off the curb?
3. Calculate how many liters of fuel the trucks used to pick up the cans.
4. How many kilograms (kg) of energy were consumed collecting the cans?
5. Making cans from recycled aluminum requires about 100 kJ of energy per can. Calculate the total energy needed to make cans from recycled aluminum, including the energy used to collect them.
6. Subtract 1,000 kJ of energy to make one aluminum can from Exercise 5a. Assuming no other energy is used, calculate how much energy is needed to make the cans from Exercise 5a.
7. Calculate the energy difference between the two methods. How many liters of fuel are saved by recycling the cans?

PROBLEMS

Apparently, there is a considerable energy savings in using recycled aluminum to make new cans. The aluminum industry is surely not that simple. There are many other factors to take account.

1. Describe two environmental and two economic problems associated with the recycling of aluminum.
 - a. There are many materials that lend themselves to recycling. Some of these do not have the clear-cut costs to use advantage of recycling aluminum. Take glass for example. To make glass from raw materials requires a little over 10,000 kJ/kg of glass manufactured. To make glass from recycled materials takes about 10,700 kJ/kg of glass produced. If the cost of collecting the recycled glass is factored in, the energy savings are more than offset.
2. Compare environmental and two economic reasons to manufacture glass from recycled materials, even if the costs are higher than from using raw materials.
3. Paper or plastic? Since the 1970s grocery shoppers have had that choice. Many consumers selected paper, erroneously thinking that it is made of natural resources, environmentally friendly materials. The polystyrene plastic bags eventually have environmental costs too. At least, this choice is not as clear-cut as it seems.
 - a. Compare the environmental, raw, and non-potential of paper versus plastic grocery bags. Investigate the environmental of each for air pollution, water pollution, solid waste, energy use, land use, and cost.
 - b. What factors contribute least to reduce water pollution energy use and land use cost of recycling food packaging?
 - c. Explain two alternatives to paper or plastic grocery bags.
