

HISTORY OF MANAGEMENT THOUGHT

= People have been managed in groups and organizations since the beginning of history. Even the most primitive villages generally had a recognized leader responsible for the welfare of the group and empowered to make decisions that others were obliged to obey.

= All these schools and approaches differ in their assumptions about how individuals in an organization behave, in what they see as the key goals of the manager, in the problems they emphasize, and in the solutions they suggest to these problems. Let us discuss and describe them in some detail.

= The evolution of management began in the late 19th century, where the Romans and Egyptians were practicing management in the construction of their aqueducts and pyramids.

= Through time several management philosophies emerged and to date, there are several management philosophies that managers can use to guide their actions.
