An Education Program for the Prevention of Inappropriate Sexual Behaviors and Sexual Exploitation in Children with Autism Spectrum Disorder

Dinisha

Blanding,2018 It is estimated that one in 59 children within the United States have been diagnosed with autism spectrum disorder ASD Children diagnosed with autism have an increased risk for sexual exploitation and sexual offending resulting in an estimated 4 to 5% of those children having some form of interaction with the legal system prior to the age of 14 Presently there is an absence of sexuality education that elicits an understanding of psychosexual development for children aged 6 to 11 Within the context of human sexuality children diagnosed with ASD experience sexual thoughts feelings and desires comparable to neurotypical peers however many individuals perceive autistic children as asexual or unable to form long lasting relationships While the topic of sexuality has received increased attention within the field of intellectual and developmental disability there has been limited research on the unique educational needs of children diagnosed with ASD Thus providers have difficulty agreeing on evidenced based interventions that address risk factors associated with social behavioral and interpersonal impairments common with this disorder This program outlines an intervention for mental health professionals parents and educators that targets the sexuality needs of children diagnosed with autism thereby reducing the probability that children will engage in sexually inappropriate behaviors or be a victim of sexual exploitation
