

Bank reconciliation statements

Bank statements are sent to the business each month to show the business the amount of money they have left in the bank after all the expenses have been paid and the money received has been paid into the bank.

The amount on the bank statement is usually different from the amount in the cash book because of timing differences.

Cheques not yet presented - These are cheques that have been paid by the business and entered into the credit side of the cash book, but which do not appear on the bank statement. The payee (person receiving the cheque) has not yet paid it into his bank and it has not been cleared yet (still in the banking system). They are on the credit side of the cash book.

Amounts not yet credited - These are cash and cheques that have been paid into the bank and entered into the debit side of the cash book, but which do not appear on the bank statement. It may take some time for the customer's account is updated with the payment. They are on the debit side of the cash book.

There may be other reasons why there is a different amount:

Items not recorded in the cash book

- Bank charges and bank interest on the bank statement
- Dishonoured cheques
- Amounts paid directly into the bank - credit transfers, standing orders, direct debits paid by customers
- Amounts paid directly by the bank to others - the business has instructed the bank to do so
- Errors made by the business need to be corrected, and errors made by the bank need to be notified to the bank.

Correcting errors on the bank statement

When starting off with the balance shown on the bank statement:

- Add amounts debited in error by the bank
