

The outward signs of puberty described here are determined by sex-specific sex hormones. During childhood little or no sex hormones are produced by the boy's testicles. But from the eleventh year a certain amount of testosterone production, even small, may be clearly detected in the sex glands. Between the ages of thirteen and sixteen the testicles increase production of male hormones (known as androgens); production is at its peak at the age of about twenty-five to thirty. While testosterone is being produced in the testicles, another hormone made up of weaker elements is produced in the cortex of the adrenal gland. The production of estrogen, a general female sex hormone, increases at the same time as the production of androgens in the male organism. Female hormones are also produced, so female as well as male hormones are present in the male organism. Female hormones are produced as byproducts of hormone production in the adrenal glands and testicles. Testosterone is converted into estrogen in the liver, mainly the liver. The function of the male organism is not yet

Signs of puberty appear slightly earlier in girls than in boys, usually at about age ten to eleven. They are also brought about by the combined action of sex hormones.

Unlike the male sex glands, the testicles, which may produce semen in undiminished quantity from puberty throughout life, the ovaries produce only a finite number of egg cells, right from birth. Approximately 400,000 oocytes, immature egg cells, are present in both ovaries. Only a small fraction of them come to maturity during the woman's reproductive period.

As in a boy, the external changes in a pubescent girl take place in a characteristic order. First the mammary glands swell, then the pubic hair appears gradually, and at the same time the pubertal growth spurt begins. Over the next few years the breasts grow larger. Somewhere around age eleven menstruation (menses) begins. But menstruation may also set in as early as age ten or not until age fifteen or sixteen.

Production of estrogen in the ovaries is begun during the course of puberty. As the female sex hormones, androgens, are produced in the female body, causing the growth of pubic hair, female pubic hair. These male hormones are produced partly in the ovaries, and to a lesser extent in the adrenal glands. Towards the end of puberty, generally twenty-two to twenty-four, the menstrual cycle develops. In the first half of the cycle a follicle ripens on the ovary, then it sheds its contents. In the second phase the follicle takes place. In the third phase the follicle becomes a "yellow body," forms from the remains of the follicle as a hormone-secreting gland and degenerates toward the end of the cycle, thus provoking the menstrual flow. If this cycle occurs regularly over a long period of time, which a girl may ascertain with the help of a menstruation calendar and by measuring the basal temperature (see Methods of Conception), then puberty is over.

Even as the first physical signs of puberty appear in their children, parents should prepare for further important physical changes. They will soon observe in themselves—in a girl, the first menstrual period, and in a boy, seminal

A mother should understand her daughter's body to keep herself calm at this time. She should know, however, that during a period, a girl should make her genital personal care with warm water during menstruation. A mother should understand that the first menstrual period is a happy event for her and her parents. It is an extreme physical maturity, and it makes her and her parents happy to see the beginning of the transition to adulthood.

As a rule it is the father of the family, since his testicles begin to produce sperm cells, puberty will begin. The boy's first seminal emission usually occurs at night or in the morning. A father or mother may have a few doubts. If a boy is not yet a man, experience and think he's
