Comments on Specific Questions

In item 1, care had to be taken to read the scale units carefully, and several did not do this, opting for C as a result. Speed/time graphs were well understood so little difficulty was found with item 2, but item 3 required some calculation and a large number of candidates opted for B, making the classic mistake of forgetting to halve the distance travelled by the sound.

A large majority of candidates clearly knew the difference between mass and weight required to answer item 4, but item 5 on moments showed a lot of candidates opting for B, perhaps simply judging by size. In item 6, it was distractor D which was the most popular, attracting those who simply divided mass by the length of one side of the cube. In item 7, a large proportion of the candidates did not subtract the original length of the spring and chose B.

The preference for option B in item 8 suggested that many candidates misunderstood the syllabus term 'internal energy'. There was a widespread lack of knowledge of the process of electrical generation in item 9, as a large proportion of the candidates opted for A. Similarly, in item 10 the popularity of distractor B showed that many incorrectly linked work done to time taken.
