I. Introduction

Agricultural marketing encompasses two fundamental concepts, namely "agriculture" and "marketing". The primary objective of agriculture is to cultivate and generate agricultural food products by utilizing natural elements for the improvement of human well-being. Corporate organizations use marketing to advertise and publicize their products and services to their target audience. This involves establishing strong customer values, using market surveys, monitoring trends, improving customer service, prioritizing needs, and maintaining consistent follow-up procedures. Agricultural marketing involves operations from production planning to retailing, including cultivation, harvesting, storage, quality assessment, transportation, and distribution. The process aims to satisfy domestic consumption needs and facilitate exportation. The agricultural marketing chain includes interconnected links like farmers, suppliers, functionaries, and importers, ensuring a diverse range of agricultural products is produced and distributed effectively.

Agriculture is the backbone of the Indian economy and a primary source of livelihood for a significant portion of the population. The Bodoland Territorial Region (BTR) in Assam, India, is an agriculturally rich area with diverse agro-climatic conditions. However, despite its potential, the agricultural sector in BTR faces several challenges in terms of marketing, which impact the income and welfare of farmers.

DEFINITION OF AGRICULTURAL MARKETING

According to the National Commission on Agriculture [XI Report, 1976], agricultural marketing is a process which starts with a decision to produce a saleable farm commodity, and it involves all the aspects of market structure or system, both functional and institutional, based on technical and economic considerations, and includes pre- and post-harvest operations.
