Capital Structure And Dividend Policy:

Does Corporate Performance Determine Capital Structure and Dividend Policy? Michael W. Faulkender, 2006 We present an integrated theory of capital structure and dividend policy in which both financial policy choices are driven by the same underlying factors and jointly determined as implicit governance mechanisms to allocate control over real project choice decisions between managers and investors At one extreme is a very highly levered firm with very little equity Such a firm puts the maximum control over project choice in the hands of investors At the other extreme is an all equity firm that pays no dividends Such a firm puts maximum control in the hands of the manager Between these two extremes is a continuum of control allocations determined by different debt equity ratios and different dividend payout ratios Higher debt equity ratios and higher dividend payouts lead to greater investor control Despite the absence of agency or asymmetric information problems control matters because of a divergence of beliefs between the manager and investors that could lead to disagreement over the value maximizing project choice The extent of the potential disagreement depends upon the firm's prior performance The manager sets the firm's dividend policy and capital structure to optimally trade off the value he attaches to being in control of project choice against the decline in stock price from taking control away from investors We generate testable predictions from the theory and then test them empirically These tests provide strong support for the theory

The economic reforms in Jordan during the last two decades have highlighted and promoted the role that non financial firms play within the Jordanian economy The ability of firms to play this role is in major part determined by the structure of the financial system in which they operate and in particular whether this financial system is able to make capital available efficiently to those firms that need it Whether this is the case can be investigated by analysing the impact of firm characteristics on some of the most important financial decisions taken by these firms and how these decisions are influenced by the presence of market imperfections The thesis examines the relation between the financing and investment decisions where the effect of financial constraints on the firm s investment decision is investigated In particular this thesis focuses on how financial constraints affect different firms by investigating the extent to which the reliance on internal cash flow is affected by firm characteristics such as size age dividend payout ratio and market listing We find that Jordanian firms are financially constrained but that these constraints do not appear to be related to firm characteristics Further results show that Jordanian firms use debt rather than equity to finance their investment The second empirical chapter focuses on the main determinants of firms capital structure Here the results show that Jordanian firms follow the pecking order theory where profitability and liquidity have a negative impact on the level of debt Size and market to book value have a positive impact supporting the view that there are significant constraints on debt financing since indicators of the financial health of the firms affect their capital structure ratio There is also evidence that ownership structure affects the firm s access to debt The final empirical chapter examines the impact of firm characteristics on dividend policy and shows that profitability and market to book value have a positive impact on dividend policy implying that firms with better access to capital or credit pay dividends This implies that firms retain earnings in order to ensure that they have sufficient capital to invest confirming the initial result that Jordanian firms are financially constrained There is also evidence of the impact of ownership structure consistent with the predictions of agency cost theory while institutional investors appear to follow the prudent man restrictions being positively associated with firms that pay dividends This thesis confirms the presence of market imperfections that have a significant influence on the financial decisions taken by Jordanian firms The consistent evidence of the importance of retained earnings shows that these firms face substantial constraints in terms of their access to external funds despite the reforms to the Jordanian financial system over the last two decades Impact of Ownership Structure on Dividend Policy and Capital Structure Jan Khan,2016
