CONCLUSION:

A detailed Simulink model for a PMSM drive system with SVPWM based on model reference adaptive system has been developed. Mathematical model can be easily incorporated in the simulation and the presence of numerous toll boxes and support guides simplifies the simulation. The space vector pulse width modulation technique (SVPWM) control technique is used in PMSM drive which has its potential advantages, such as lower current waveform distortion, high utilization of DC voltage, low switching and noise losses, constant switching frequency and reduced torque pulsations provides a fast response and superior dynamic performance.
