An Education Program for the Prevention of Inappropriate Sexual Behaviors and Sexual Exploitation in Children with Autism Spectrum Disorder Dinisha Blanding, 2018

It is estimated that one in 59 children within the United States have been diagnosed with autism spectrum disorder ASD. Children diagnosed with autism have an increased risk for sexual exploitation and sexual offending, resulting in an estimated 4 to 5% of those children having some form of interaction with the legal system prior to the age of 14. Presently, there is an absence of sexuality education that elicits an understanding of psychosexual development for children aged 6 to 11. Within the context of human sexuality, children diagnosed with ASD experience sexual thoughts, feelings, and desires comparable to neurotypical peers; however, many individuals perceive autistic children as asexual or unable to form long-lasting relationships. While the topic of sexuality has received increased attention within the field of intellectual and developmental disability, there has been limited research on the unique educational needs of children diagnosed with ASD. Thus, providers have difficulty agreeing on evidenced-based interventions that address risk factors associated with social, behavioral, and interpersonal impairments common with this disorder. This program outlines an intervention for mental health professionals, parents, and educators that targets the sexuality needs of children diagnosed with autism, thereby reducing the probability that children will engage in sexually inappropriate behaviors or be a victim of sexual exploitation.

Each chapter has an easy-read summary to help parents who may have a learning difficulty and to allow staff to create accessible resources. Emphasising the importance of communication, the need for consistent support for individuals, and with an emphasis on human rights, the book explores how and when families and frontline staff can work together to support the people they care for.
