coffee tea and organic cotton in Ghana Rwanda and Peru The emphasis is on how they became shareholders in companies that market their product in the North the challenges faced and benefits gained for the different parties involved To round out the picture brief examples of another marketing initiative in India known as Zameen and additional background on the work of TWIN Trading are provided In Chapter 3 the authors provide a synthesis of experience and offer insights into the different motives for promoting shareholding by producers farmers After presenting the perceptions of different stakeholders the companies the donors and the farmers organizations as described in the cases a section is devoted to the all important issue of sustainability for shareholding by farmer organizations At the end there are annexes that provide answers to several common questions on farmers as shareholders and a list of selected websites where the reader may go to get current news on the many organizations and fair trade companies discussed in the book

AlterOrganic: Local Agendas for Organic Agriculture in Rural Development Johannes Kotschi, 2003 Millions of farmers throughout the world cannot or will not accept the Green Revolution approach to agriculture What can the principles of Organic Agriculture with or without certification contribute to rural development in the tropics and subtropics The question was central to an international workshop held in Bonn in October 2002 organised by the German non governmental organisation AGRECOL AGRECOL is a non profit association and supports ecologically sound land use in Africa Asia Latin America Eastern Europe and the former Soviet Union The members of AGRECOL have strong professional links to development cooperation They work with government agencies and NGOs in education and research or as consultants

India's Organic Farming Revolution Sapna E. Thottathil, 2014-10-01 Should you buy organic food Is it just a status symbol or is it really better for us Is it really better for the environment What about organic produce grown thousands of miles from our kitchens or on massive corporately owned farms Is local or small scale better even if it s not organic A lot of consumers who would like to do the right thing for their health and the environment are asking such questions Sapna Thottathil calls on us to rethink the politics of organic food by focusing on what it means for the people who grow and sell it what it means for their health the health of their environment and also their economic and political well being Taking readers to the state of Kerala in southern India she shows us a place where the so called Green Revolution program of hybrid seeds synthetic fertilizers and rising pesticide use had failed to reduce hunger while it caused a cascade of economic medical and environmental problems Farmers burdened with huge debts from buying the new seeds and chemicals were committing suicide in troubling numbers Farm laborers suffered from pesticide poisoning and rising rates of birth defects A sharp fall in biodiversity worried environmental activists and everyone was anxious about declining yields of key export crops like black pepper and coffee In their debates about how to solve these problems farmers environmentalists and policymakers drew on Kerala s history of and continuing commitment to grassroots democracy In 2010 they took the unprecedented step of enacting a policy that requires all Kerala growers to farm organically by 2020 How this policy came to be and its immediate economic political and physical effects on the state s residents offer lessons for everyone interested in agriculture the environment and what to eat for dinner Kerala s example shows that when done right this kind of agriculture can be good for everyone in our global food system
