De-Westernizing Communication Research Georgette Wang, 2010-12-14 The rise of postmodern theories and pluralist thinking has paved the way for multicultural approaches to communication studies and now is the time for decentralization de Westernization and differentiation This trend is reflected in the increasing number of communication journals with a national or regional focus Alongside this proliferation of research output from outside of the mainstream West there is a growing discontent with communication theories being Westerncentric Compared with earlier works that questioned the need to distinguish between the Western and the non Western and to build Asian communication theories there seems to be greater assertiveness and determination in searching for and developing theoretical frameworks and paradigms that take consideration of and therefore are more relevant to the cultural context in which research is accomplished This path breaking book moves beyond critiquing Westerncentrism in media and communication studies by examining where Eurocentrism has come from how is it reflected in the study of media and communication what the barriers and solutions to de centralizing the production of theories are and what is called for in order to establish Asian communication theories

"American Orientalism" by Douglass Little. Discussion of the First Chapter Issam El Masmodi, 2021-10-05 Essay from the year 2019 in the subject English Language and Literature Studies Culture and Applied Geography grade 14 language English abstract It is inescapable to write about American Orientalism without crossing over Orientalism itself for the reason that if there was no Edward Said the works of Douglass little will not come into being Said is of great importance as a literary critic as well as a cultural theorist in the sense that what is known now as post colonialism is highly indebted to Said's early works including Orientalism. Many critics agree with the fact that post colonial theorists such as Homi K Bhabha and Gayatri Spivak could not replace Edward Said. Above all he was the first one who set up the foundations of the colonial discourse along with Frantz Fanon. Thus he has a major influence in the emergence of other post colonial thinkers. However this does not mean that Said's works are holy texts. That is they have no shortcomings. To name a few some critics claim that Said's works are ahistorical meaning that it is impossible that all these orientalist starting from the poet Dante would have the same colonial discursive assumptions. Second some of the major criticism directed to Orientalism is neglecting the question of agency and resistance by the colonized itself.
