

Freedom Of Speech And Expression And Contempt Of Court

Publications

Abstract: "I will hold you in contempt of court." We have often come across this statement somewhere. But do we know about it? The Times of India published a hearing of a two-judge bench of the Supreme Court noted that the power to punish for contempt was necessary to 'secure public respect and confidence in the judicial process.'

Every citizen is granted the freedom of speech and expression which includes them questioning the court, the judiciary as an institution, and its functioning. While on the other hand, the court has a discretionary power to punish them back on their statement which lowers the dignity of the court. This clearly shows a conflict between the contempt of court and freedom of speech and expression but also on the other hand they are equally important for a democratic set-up as they are made for the benefit of the people.

Contempt of court grants fair administration of justice whereas freedom of speech and expression grants judicial accountability. In modern times, freedom of speech and expression is considered the mother of all liberties and is accepted as the essence of society. People use it to write or publish any criticism on the judiciary which is fair and true without any contempt proceedings. The abuse of liberty of free speech and expression takes the case towards the law of contempt. The contempt of court is not only exercised to protect the dignity of the judge but also to protect the administration of justice.

Introduction

Rule of Law is the basic principle to govern any civilized and democratic country. This principle maintains the supremacy of law, bringing everyone under its control without any subjective discretion. Our imminent constitution-makers have made certain fundamental rights for the citizens to guide them through and towards a democratic country. Freedom of speech and expression is mostly considered as the fundamental
