

Listening

- Tell students that you are thinking of something you would like to learn (or learn to do) in the future. Have them ask you yes/no questions to find out what it is. After students have found out what you would like to learn, have them think of something they want to learn and then, in pairs, take turns asking yes/no questions to find out what their partner would like to learn. Finally, have several volunteers share what they would like to learn, and explain why.
- A • Have students complete the exercise while you monitor and facilitate. Then call on groups to summarize their discussions about one saying or quotation. Ask other groups to express agreement or disagreement. Optionally, allow students to choose the saying or quotation they find most interesting, discuss it with others who feel the same way (see Teaching Tip), and then share their ideas.

Teaching Tip: Learner Agency

Having students discuss questions in random groups is common, especially when they are all discussing the same topic. However, if the situation allows, it can be effective to let students choose their own groups based on the topic they would prefer to discuss. This can give students a greater feeling of agency and increase their level of motivation and engagement.

- B • Have students complete the exercise while you monitor. Then review the sayings as a class.
- C • Review the Listening Strategy with students. Then have them complete the exercise. Review the answers as a class. If there are differences of opinion, have students justify their ideas.

GOAL Talk about Learning

Listening

- A In groups, discuss what each saying or quotation means and how much you agree with it.
 - Practice makes perfect. (traditional saying) In order to become great at doing something, you must do practice it a lot.
 - Play is our brain's favorite way of learning. (Diane Ackerman) Humans not only love play, but we can learn a lot when we are playing.
 - Anyone who stops learning is old, whether at twenty or eighty. (Henry Ford) Humans should keep learning throughout their lives.
 - One child, one teacher, one book, and one pen can change the world. (Malala Yousafzai) One person, one book, and one piece of writing can change people's minds and their behavior.
 - It is not enough to learn how to ride, you must also learn how to fall. (traditional saying) Always succeeding is good, but it is also important to know what to do when you fail.
- B MY WORLD In pairs, discuss any sayings about education or learning that you know or ones that you may have in your country.
- C Listen to part of a talk. Take notes. Then circle the correct option.
 - The speaker is probably a ...

☐ (A) former educator.	☐ (B) university student.
--	---
 - The best title for this talk is ...

☐ (A) Research into Learning.	☐ (B) Effective Skills for Teachers.
 - The speaker suggests that learning styles ...

☐ (A) are something that few people know about.	☐ (B) may or may not be something people have.
---	--

Listening Strategy: Understanding Question Types

In most cases, listening comprehension questions are written in the same order as the information is spoken. However, this may not be true for items that ask about the identity of the speaker, such as The speaker is probably a ... or items that ask about the main idea, such as The best title for this talk is ... To answer these questions, students often need to have heard the whole script. If students preview the questions before listening, it can help them understand which questions can be answered while they listen, and which they should answer after the track ends.
