Moles of Chalk Lab

This lab is designed to help you review the concept of the mole which will be on your upcoming test, but it is also an introduction to how I expect you to write up lab reports for future labs we will be doing the second half of the year.

Purpose: The purpose section of a lab is where you tell the reader your reason for doing the lab in the first place. For example, many researchers for drug companies have as their purpose that they want to cure AIDS or some other disease. This section should be three or four sentences long. If it's too short, it won't be clear why you're doing the lab. If it's too long, you're doing too much work and the reader will probably just skip over it.*

Write your purpose: _____

Hypothesis: If _____, then _____. (The hypothesis is a one-line sentence where you discuss how you'll solve the problem at hand. The statement after "if" is the independent variable. The independent variable is whatever you'll do to solve the problem. The statement after "then" is the dependent variable, because what happens will depend on what you did in the first place. Generally, the dependent variable will be that the problem you mentioned in the purpose will be solved.)*

Write your hypothesis: _____

Materials: Your materials list must be VERY complete. You need to indicate how much of each material will be used in the experiment so you know what you'll need. If you plan on arranging some of the equipment into a more complex setup (for example, if you're going to heat something over a Bunsen burner, you'd need a ring stand, wire gauze, etc.), draw it as well as mentioning the equipment used. It's never a bad idea to leave a couple of extra lines at the end of this section so you can add more things that you've forgotten when you started your lab.*
