

$17.05-$17.44 next week or the week after. The structure of the rise should be three waves or some variation thereof. After this bounce completes, prices will decline to below this morning's low. So this is the near-term roadmap indicated by the progressing wave structure and we'll be tracking it unfold over the coming week or more.

At today's $1260.55 low, [Gold] also completed an apparent five-wave decline from the $1357.57 high on September 8. We showed the short-term wave structure in silver (above) because the subwaves of the decline are clearer in silver than they are in gold. Here, too, gold should bounce, partially retracing the decline from the September 8 high. Initial resistance is $1290-$1298. Prior fourth waves are in the $1309-$1316 range. Both are possible targets for the push. Overall, sentiment still does not seem sufficiently pessimistic to support a sustained rise above the September 8 high. So our view remains that gold, once the bounce ends, should decline once more, dropping to lower levels than this morning's low. We will be monitoring the rise closely and if the evidence changes, we will discuss it immediately here.

Have a great weekend!
