

The Social Group Worker's Role in Group Work Process

by Kenneth Postman

Introduction

The worker is tremendously important in social group work. It is well and generally agreed upon that the key to effective group work lies with the worker. The worker is his helping role is responsible for the persistence of groups and help for the group. There is no single, universally applicable style of working as a group. A worker has to construct the himself a framework of concepts and knowledge especially relevant to group situations.

The central function of all social workers in dealing with a group is to help the members successfully group and, while doing this, the group worker performs various roles. The different specific roles performed by him are determined by the nature of the group, the group goal and the relationships within the group setting. In this chapter, we discuss the various "roles" that the worker performs while dealing with group process in different field settings.

Defining the Worker in Social Group Work

The social group worker is a person with knowledge, skills and values. The group worker is primarily a "helping person" rather than a "group leader." His influence is indirect, rather than direct. He is not a boss when he
