Abstract: Considering some activities that can be developed in teaching pragmatic, metapragmatic discussions prompted by Discourse Completion Task (DCT) can be used to bring up EFL learners' pragmatic awareness. Within the framework of task-based language teaching, teachers may adopt or modify DCT as explicit instruction in teaching pragmatic. The purpose of this study was to investigate the effectiveness of DCT as explicit pragmatic instruction to facilitate EFL learners in developing their pragmatic competence. The findings suggest that the explicit instruction results in some variations of linguistic forms that contribute to the development of learners' pragmatic competence. Further, providing learners with authentic input should be applied in EFL contexts in order to raise their pragmatic awareness. Thus, as one of pragmatic teaching techniques, DCT can be effectively used to overcome issues on teaching pragmatic in the classroom

1. INTRODUCTION

Pragmatic competence has been essentially recognized as one of the factors to perceive learners' communicative competence. Many research studies on pragmatic competence have affirmed that even proficient English learners often use language inappropriately (Hinkel, 1997; Bardovi-Harglig, 1999; Martinez-Flor, 2003; Jianda, 2006; Jiang, 2006; Decapua & Dunham, 2007; Bu, 2011; Phisghadam & Sharafadini, 2011). In other words, proficiency in a target language does not only involve grammatical competence, but it also requires pragmatic competence. Communication breakdowns may happen if the learners are not knowledgeable of social, cultural, and discourse aspects in different situations bound with the language they produce. Mostly, research in interlanguage pragmatic (ILP) compared between English native speakers (NS) and non-native speakers (NNS) in realizing the speech act strategies when they use the language (Matsumura, 2003; Schauer, 2006; Felix-Brasdefer, 2007; Grossi, 2009; Jalilifar, Hashemian, & Tabatabaee, 2011). Since Kasper and Schmidt (1996) argue that ILP has notably involved within the larger body of Second Language Acquisition (SLA) studies, it starts attracting researchers to examine the effects of instruction on ILP development. Still, little research has been conducted on how instruction plays an important role in learners' pragmatic development (Alcon, 2005; Martinez-Flor & Uso-Juan, 2006). Thus, the aim of this report was to briefly investigate the practical use of Discourse Completion Task (DCT) as an explicit instruction on Indonesian EFL learners' production of suggestion acts in English in terms of the variety of linguistic formulations.

Regarding the development of learner's pragmatic competence, there are some useful activities aimed at raising their pragmatic awareness, such as presentation and discussion guided by the teacher, translation, dramas, simulations, and role-play activity. This task-based approach used in these activities can be either explicit or implicit instruction. The main difference is that explicit instruction provides learners with detailed metapragmatic explanations about target-structure
