Peter Saville Declan Stone, 1992 Peter Saville Peter Saville, 2009 The flat pack plinth has a direct correspondence with designer Peter Saville's observation that it all looks like art to me now When Saville exhibited his Estate at the Migros Museum Zurich in 2005/06 he deliberately presented the last room as a work in progress Included were objects that he knew did not have contemporary artistic currency but objects that somehow still seemed pertinent materials of an idea Not wanting to present these objects as artworks Saville had laid them out on tables apart from one an exceptional plastic bird which he chose to place on a plinth It was in this action that Peter appreciated the transformative energy of the plinth an energy he felt others were ready to share Saville has now designed and fabricated a white cardboard flat pack plinth Made of white centred display board and in a prototype edition of 200 the plinth replicates those conventionally made from wood He has invited 22 other artists including Richard Hamilton Peter Blake Robert Longo Wolfgang Tillmans Brian Eno and Jeremy Deller to place anything of their choice on a plinth Saville's flat pack plinth recognizes the public's own ability and transfers to them the power of curatorial decision allowing anyone now to pass judgment on what is worth looking at It acknowledges a changing audience and their will to consume art The flat pack plinth is their DIY accessory in a time when culture has briefly stopped to let millions of people on board Advances in Fashion and Design Research III Joana Cunha, Ana Cristina
