ABSTRACT: Globally significant numbers of marine turtles nest on Australian beaches; however, the human population of Australia is also heavily concentrated around coastal areas. Coastal development brings with it increases in artificial light. Since turtles are vulnerable to disorientation from artificial light adjacent to nesting areas, the mitigation of disruption caused by light pollution has become an important component of marine turtle conservation strategies in Australia. However, marine turtles are faced with a multitude of anthropogenic threats and managers need to prioritise impacts to ensure limited conservation resources can result in adequate protection of turtles. Knowledge of the extent to which nesting areas may be vulnerable to light pollution is essential to guide management strategies. We use geographical information system analysis to over-lay turtle nesting data onto night-time lights data produced by the NOAA National Geophysical Data Center, to assess the proportion of marine turtles in Australia potentially at risk from light pollution. We also identify the Australian nesting sites which may face the greatest threat from artificial light. Our assessment indicates that the majority of nesting turtles appear to be at low risk, but population management units in Western Australia and Queensland are vulnerable to light pollution. The risk to turtles from light generated by industrial developments appears significantly higher than at any other location. Consequently, managers of turtle management units in regions of proposed or on-going industrial development should anticipate potentially disrupted turtle behaviour due to light pollution. Our methodology will be useful to managers of turtles elsewhere.

INTRODUCTION

The human population on Earth is expanding rapidly (Steck et al. 2010), and artificial light is fundamental to the functioning of modern society. Yet while humans have become accustomed to artificial cycles of light and dark, other species, especially nocturnal or crepuscular organisms, may depend upon natural light cycles for successful functioning (Kramer & Birney 2001). As a result, the amount of artificial light now used around the world is causing some concern among scientists and conservationists (Rich & Longcore 2006). On a global scale, the growth of human populations in coastal zones is occurring faster than human population growth in general (Nicholls 1995). Due to this disproportionate growth, coastal habitats have become some of those most vulnerable to light pollution (Bird et al. 2004).

Marine turtles are arguably the best-known example of an organism adversely affected by coastal lighting (Witherington & Martin 2000, Salmon 2003). Dependence upon visual brightness cues for 'sea-
