

A VERSATILE QUEEN REARING AND BANKING SYSTEM

PART 1 THE "CLOAKE BOARD METHOD" OF QUEEN REARING

Rearing your own queens is one of the more interesting and rewarding aspects of beekeeping. It provides a means to maintain young, vigorous queens in colonies and is the foundation of good colony management. This also enables a degree of selection for desirable colony characteristics.

There are numerous methods of queen rearing, though each follows the same basic concept. This requires: to encourage, enhance and sustain conditions that contribute to the natural stimulus to swarm, with an element of control. During the spring buildup season, conditions naturally favor colony reproduction. Later in the season, queen rearing can be more of a challenge.

The queen rearing system described here is one I have routinely used and adapted to serve various purposes. It is versatile and applicable to both small and large scale production. When seasonal conditions and management needs change, simple manipulations allow colonies to be used for other purposes, with minimal labor. These can be moved into honey production, pollination or used to make mating nuclei and colony increases.

The original concept of the system is the "Cloake Board Method". Beekeepers worldwide have utilized and featured this in various publications and web sites. In 1979, I first wrote about this in ABJ. Over time I have come to appreciate its flexibility and enduring value. Today, this system continues to be featured in the specialized beekeeping classes I offer at Ohio State University. Numerous requests to have this in print, with updated modifications for banking methods, is the reason for this article.

The Cloake Board Method must be credited to its originator, New Zealander Harry Cloake. Internationally recognized, Cloake was an active leader in the industry and an innovative beekeeper. In the 1950s, he helped his father operate a small beekeeping business. By the 1970s, he had built this into one of the largest beekeeping operations in New Zealand, with the help of his two sons, Mervyn and Russell. Today, Mervyn continues the business.

I was fortunate to meet Cloake at the 1977 Apimondia Congress in Adelaide, Australia, and eagerly accepted an invitation to visit his apiary in Timaru, on the South Island of New Zealand. As a new, young beekeeper from the other side of the world, this was an exciting and memorable adventure. His queen rearing system impressed me.

The beauty of the Cloake Board Method of queen rearing is that it addresses the needs of the bees as well as the beekeeper. To rear high quality queen cells, the natural stimulus of the bees is encouraged. For the beekeeper, it is efficient in the use of bees, labor and equipment.

The Cloake Board Method takes advantage of both a queen-less and queen-right system. Queen cells started in a queen-less state
