

A man and a woman, both wearing cowboy hats, are leaning on a wooden fence in a grassy field. The woman is on the left, wearing a brown hat and a blue shirt, looking towards the man. The man is on the right, wearing a light-colored hat and a plaid shirt, looking back at her. A horse is partially visible on the left side of the frame.

Digitally Gillian Rose, 2025-10-01 This book explores what's happening to ways of seeing urban spaces in the contemporary moment when so many of the technologies through which cities are visualised are digital. Cities have always been pictured in many media and for many different purposes. This edited collection explores how that picturing is changing in an era of digital visual culture. Analogue visual technologies like film cameras were understood as creating some sort of a trace of the real city. Digital visual technologies in contrast harvest and process digital data to create images that are constantly refreshed, modified, and circulated. Each of the chapters in this volume examines a different example of how this processual visibility is reconfiguring the spatial and temporal organisation of urban life.
