This book outlines a methodology for producing macro recycled polypropylene PP fibres with optimal mechanical properties and illustrates the reinforcing effects of recycled PP fibres in concrete It describes the great potential of using these fibres in concrete applications such as footpaths and precast elements Further it sheds new light on the environmental impacts of using recycled PP fibres which are evaluated by means of cradle to gate life cycle assessment based on the Australian context The use of recycled PP fibre not only helps reduce consumption of virgin materials like steel or plastic but also provides an attractive avenue for recycling plastic waste The book will appeal to engineers governments and solid waste planners and offers a valuable reference for the plastic waste recycling and plastic fibre reinforced concrete industries div Compaction Behavior of Fibre Reinforced Soil Kiat Keng Loo,2005 Small-scale Manufacture of Stabilised Soil Blocks ,1987 This memorandum provides technical and economic information on alternative technologies for the production of stabilised soil blocks The information provided relates mostly to small scale units producing up to 400 blocks per day It covers all aspects of block making the quarrying and testing of raw materials the choice of soil stabilisers pre processing operations grinding sieving proportioning and mixing block forming methods including a detailed description of machines currently available for making soil blocks the curing and testing of produced blocks and the use of mortars and Flexural Testing of Compressed Earth Blocks Reinforced with Natural Fibers Erin Alders, 2012 Sustainable development of the built environment in developing countries is one of the major challenges of the 21st century The use of local materials in the construction of dwellings is one of the potential ways to support sustainable development in both urban and rural settings Raw earth is abundantly available in many locations and can serve as building materials in low rise dwellings This study presents an experimental investigation on the use of natural fibers in Compressed Earth Block CEB to increase the toughness of the material Four different types of fibers were considered as reinforcement of CEBs rice straw barley straw bamboo viscose and hand planed bamboo fibers Plate specimens made of earthen materials were formed in a steel mold and compressed with a hydraulic mechanism The plates were then cut into three replicate specimens and were loaded in three point bending to evaluate strengthening and toughening effects of each fiber type In some cases plate failure was accompanied by fiber pullout while in others fiber breakage was the predominant mechanism of failure All fiber types enhanced the toughness of the CEBs relative to that of unreinforced units The results indicated that bamboo fiber enhances the structural performance of CEBs more significantly than either type of straw
