Abstract

This paper examines the relationships which exist between personality and second language learning and adds to the data available on the use of a highly respected personality indicator, the Myers Briggs Type Indicator (MBTI). Language learning and academic success are both highly correlated with intelligence, but research suggests that the importance of intelligence declines after high school age, partly because of the stronger effects of personality. This study places emphasis on the importance of personality in learning success and examines research evidence on the issue, discussing some of the inconsistent results that have been obtained. A study of 100 Hong Kong university undergraduates was carried out to add to this research base. The instruments used were the MBTI for personality traits, the Strategy Inventory for Language Learning (S.I.L.L.L.) for learning strategies and a standardized test for language proficiency. Significant statistical relationships were not found and the reasons for this are discussed.

Keywords: Personality, Second language learning, Intelligence, Hong Kong

1. Introduction

The relationship between personality and second language learning ability, has received some research interest in the last few decades. The results that are available however, have sometimes been inconsistent, often because of methodological and conceptual differences in the way the studies were performed. This article will consider some of the research evidence which has examined these relationships and details a recent study of undergraduate students in Hong Kong which aimed to determine not only the connections between personality, language learning and learning strategies, but also to add to the available data on the personality profiles of Chinese students.

The study will first briefly clarify what might be meant by the terms intelligence, learning strategies and personality, before presenting details of the Hong Kong data collection.

2. Theoretical Perspectives

According to Chamorro-Premuzic and Furnham, (2005, p. 40) researchers in cognitive psychology agree on a definition of intelligence which states that it.....

"...is a very general mental capacity that, among other things, involves the ability to reason, plan, solve problems, think abstractly, comprehend complex ideas, learn quickly and learn from experience.... it reflects a broader and deeper capability for comprehending our surroundings- 'catching on' 'making sense' of things, or 'figuring out' what to do...."

Many of the elements in the definition of intelligence given above have also been described as indications of the 'good language learner' and have been tabulated in lists of learning strategies that such learners use (Oxford, 1995). Learning a second language successfully requires using reasoning and problem solving abilities and it requires the ability to use and apply strategies which try to make sense of the structure and use of a new language, a clear overlap with definitions of intelligence. Strong elements of successful language learning have been the use of what are called cognitive strategies (the direct processing of language, e.g. memorizing, inferring meaning, solving problems, identifying or making sense of relationships) and metacognitive strategies (thinking about those processes). Both of these have been identified as of crucial importance in strategy research. (O'Malley, et al. 1985a). Attempts have been made to teach strategies for language learning, but these have not met with much success (Hassall, 1984, O'Malley, et al. 1985b). Among the reasons for this may be the fact that the ability to use strategies is related to general intelligence and thus subject to the same developmental, social and genetic influences which limit the effects of direct teaching.

Research has provided evidence of the power of general intelligence in predicting academic performance, including second language learning success (academic performance being estimated by written or oral examinations, continuous assessment, group work, essays or dissertations). (Gagne & St Pere, 2001, Neisser, et al. 1996, Sternberg & Kaufman, 1996). However, there is also evidence that general intelligence (as measured by IQ tests) is often not highly correlated with academic performance. (Singh, & Varma, 1995). Davies,Ellen Hastings Janosik,1991 The Big Five in SLA Ewa Piechurska-Kuciel,2020-11-03 This book also focuses on analyzing each trait from the point of view of its higher and lower order structure as well as from the affective cognitive behavioral social and academic perspectives apart from outlining the field of personality psychology Personality traits are important in daily interaction and are a significant factor in achieving educational goals also for second and foreign language L2 learners Consequently studying the role of personality in the field of second language acquisition SLA appears to be of primary importance especially because there has been little research on this subject Moreover general results pertaining to the role of personality in L2 are inconclusive This book s primary objective is to present a concise and updated picture of personality on the basis of the Big Five model which is accessible for non psychologists The middle part of the book focuses on discussing potential merits and drawbacks of each trait for the purpose of the process of SLA both from the formal and informal theoretical and empirical points of view The next part includes a description of an empirical study whose main aim is to sensitize the reader to direct and indirect influences that personality may exert on L2 learning The book closes with a concluding chapter aiming at clarifying directions for further empirical study of personality as well as issues in research methodology

The Psychology of the Language Learner Zoltán Dörnyei, 2005

Research results over the past decades have consistently demonstrated that a key reason why many second language learners fail while some learners do better with less effort lies in various learner attributes such as personality traits motivation or language aptitude In psychology these attributes have traditionally been called individual differences The scope of individual learner differences is broad ranging from creativity to learner styles and anxiety yet there is no current comprehensive and unified volume that provides an overview of the considerable amount of research conducted on various language learner differences until now Each chapter in this new volume focuses on a different individual difference variable Besides a review of the relevant second language literature Zoltán Dörnyei presents a concise overview of the psychological research involving each topic A key concern for the author has been to define the various learner factors as measurable constructs and therefore the discussion includes a summary of the most famous tests and questionnaires in each domain A wide range of readers will benefit from this book students in linguistics applied linguistics modern languages and psychology programs second language teachers participating in in service training courses and researchers in second language acquisition and psychology

Canales,Susana Leralta,2022 This book brings together 18 theoretical and empirical chapters that analyze the role of emotion expression perception processing and identity notions and representations construction conflict in the process of learning a second language Studies on the differences in emotionality in L1 and L2 agree that in L2 there is an alteration that in many cases manifests itself as a decrease in the affective load which can lead to a certain indifference to the emotional content transmitted and to a lesser involvement in communication It is also known that emotion plays a fundamental role in the construction of identity in a second language in the shaping of the self that feels and communicates and in the ability to cope with the learning process Most of the studies have focused on the understanding of these two dimensions in balanced bilingual speakers but there is little evidence on their functioning in speakers with otherdegrees of proficiency the case of second language learners and on their role in the learning process Advancing in this knowledge is fundamental for the improvement of everything related to second language acquisition We need new and innovate approaches approaches that lead to more effective programs increased interest in language learning and the consolidation of multilingual societies
