

Module 13

MANAGERIAL ACCOUNTING FOR MBAs

EXERCISES

EXERCISE 13-1

The major differences between financial and managerial accounting are summarized in Exhibit 13-1. Important differences from Michael's perspective are:

- Financial accounting is a reporting system, while management accounting is a decision-making system.
- Financial accounting is concerned with external users, while management accounting is concerned with internal users.
- Financial accounting involves general-purpose financial statements, while management accounting involves special-purpose information.
- Financial accounting statements are highly aggregated, while management accounting information may be aggregated or disaggregated, depending on the needs of management.
- Financial accounting reports are for a relatively long reporting period, while management accounting reports are for a long or a short period, depending on need.
- Financial accounting reports are the past, while management accounting is oriented to the future.

Management accounting can help Michael be a better product manager by:

- Providing him with a framework for analyzing decision alternatives.
- Providing information needed to develop plans for a coming period.
- Providing information needed to measure performance.

Note: There are many other possible answers.
