Abstract

There has been various misperceptions about the meaning, nature and scope of social studies education. There is also different perceptions of the nature of social studies because of the varying cultural and environmental setting of man and that differs from country to country. Social studies is a systematic study designed to study subject which is concerned with the problems of man's living in the society with a view of finding solutions to those problems. It is also a subject which concentrates on the three (3) areas of knowledge, cognitive, affective and psychomotor domains. It is not easy to have a generally acceptable definition of social studies. This is because of its eclectic nature in terms of location, time, circumstances and the individual scholar defining it. It is against this background that this paper discusses various on the nature of social studies, scope of social studies, objectives of social studies, expanding functions of social studies and how social studies education contributes to national development. Finally, conclusions and recommendations are made.

Social studies is the study of man and his physical, social, political, cultural and economical environments. It centres on the development of man, how man influences his environment and how the environment influences him in return. Kwock, an American in 1981, who worked in Nigeria in the 1970's defined social studies as "a programme of study which society uses to instill in students the knowledge, skills, values, attitudes and actions it considers important, concerning the relationships human beings have with each other, their world and themselves". Social studies focused on man and his interactions with his environment. It also helps in changing because of the factors of time and human development. It fights against evil vices in the society. The subject considers peculiar problems of a country and finds solutions to those problems. As such, the objectives of Nigerian social studies must reflect the spirit of Nigerian philosophy of education. It must help in developing the capacity to learn and to acquire certain basic skills of listening, speaking, reading, writing and calculations. Social studies education focuses on the use of critical and reflective thinking to solve the problems of man's survival in the environment.
