

We reaffirm our rights to the fair use of moving images under the copyright clause of the Constitution (Article 1: Section 8) and under the Copyright Law of 1976 (Section 107).

These rights refer to the fair use of all images, copyrighted, uncopied, public domain or "orphaned."

Though we speak as individuals, we also urge our places of employment and professional associations to publish best practices statements that clarify and support these rights.

We refer here specifically to the right to:

- I. Play back or screen clips in a classroom or educational setting.
- II. Play back or exchange clips in a distance education extension of a classroom setting.
- III. Exchange clips with a colleague in a process of teaching, scholarship or research.
- IV. Copy a moving image document to preserve it for future study.
- V. Screen clips at scholarly conferences or presentations.
- VI. Disseminate clips to publicize or inform the public about an exhibit in a museum or educational institution.
- VII. Combine clips to disseminate or publish a commentary montage to make a thematic or critical point.
- VIII. Disseminate clips to inform the public about the perianth or special holdings of a moving image collection, a specific part of the collection, or a theme from the collection presented as a commentary montage.
- IX. Combine clips to share with others in personal or artistic experiments that have no ascertainable commercial purpose or value.
- X. The foregoing in no way precludes an application of fair use under Section 107 of the 1976 Copyright law in areas not covered in the areas enumerated above.

These are basic fair use rights for scholars, teachers, researchers, writers, moving image artists, documentarians, and consumers of media images in our modern world.
