Background The presence of COVID-19 in low- and middle-income countries (LMICs) is raising important concerns about effective pandemic response and preparedness in the context of fragile health systems and the pervasiveness of misinformation. The objective of this study was to gain an understanding of how COVID-19 was perceived by households experiencing extreme poverty in the Philippines.

Methods This study was conducted in partnership with International Care Ministries (ICM), a Philippine-based non-governmental organization (NGO) that runs a poverty-alleviation program called Transform targeted towards extreme low-income households. We integrated knowledge, attitudes, and practices (KAP) questions into ICM's cross-sectional program monitoring and evaluation systems from February 20 through March 13, 2020. Frequencies and proportions were calculated to describe the respondents' responses, and the Kruskal-Wallis test and binomial logistic regression were undertaken to determine the socio-demographic characteristics associated with COVID-19 KAPs.

Results In total, 2224 respondents from 166 communities in rural, urban and coastal settings were surveyed. Although the survey was administered during the earlier stages of the pandemic, 94.0% of respondents had already heard of COVID-19. Traditional media sources such as television (85.5%) and radio (56.1%) were reported as the main sources of information about the virus. Coughing and sneezing were identified as a transmission route by 89.5% of respondents, while indirect hand contact was the least commonly identified transmission route, recognized by 72.6% of respondents. Handwashing was identified by 82.2% of respondents as a preventive measure against the virus, but social distancing and avoiding crowds were only identified by 32.4% and 40.6%, respectively. Handwashing was the most common preventive practice in response to COVID-19, adopted by 89.9% of respondents. A greater number of preventive measures were taken by those with more knowledge of potential transmission routes.

Conclusions There is a need for targeted health education as a response strategy to COVID-19 in low-income settings, and it is important that strategies are contextually relevant. Understanding KAPs among populations experiencing extreme poverty will be important as tailored guidance for public health response and communication strategies are developed for LMICs.

Sex, Power & Taboo Dorothy E. Roberts, 2009 In the Caribbean sexuality has never been a topic for public discussion Previously relegated to theatrical innuendo musical lyrics and other popular forms of cultural expression the HIV and AIDS pandemic have now thrown this taboo subject centre stage The discourse on gender and sexuality is however still being shaped and this book sets the platform for that discussion Proceeding from a premise that gender influences sexuality and sexual behaviour Sex Power and Taboo provides an interdisciplinary approach to the exploration of how gender affects HIV risk and prevention The paradigm of HIV and AIDS research is shifted by illuminating the influence of gender ideologies norms and power relationships on sexuality and the impact of gender to HIV risk and prevention within and outside of the Caribbean The contributors are Caribbean and international and discuss gender and sexuality for the academic for those in the public health service as well as social policymakers Sex Power and Taboo contributes to the research based interventions to aid the prevention of HIV and AIDS and other sexually transmitted diseases and will assist in the design implementation and evaluation of programmes addressing the AIDS epidemic
